KATRINA'S AFTERMATH

FEMA Wants No Photos of Dead

From Reuters

September 7, 2005

NEW ORLEANS — The U.S. agency leading Hurricane Katrina rescue efforts said Tuesday that it does not want the news media to photograph the dead as they are recovered.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency, heavily criticized for its slow response to the devastation caused by the hurricane, rejected journalists' requests to accompany rescue boats searching for storm victims.

An agency spokeswoman said space was needed on the rescue boats.

"We have requested that no photographs of the deceased be made by the media," the spokeswoman said in an e-mail.

djarum writes: "This maybe explains why the local media is staying away from pictures of the dead in NO.

The Chief Justice Of The United States has the power to break ties (in a 4 to 4 split) and then write the majority opinion. And, if he opposes the majority opinion he may simply vote with them and then write a contrary ruling which mitigates their victory. What he writes becomes the "law" regardless of the debates or sentiments of the remaining justices.

The potential for abuse is enormous.

For instance, the court ruled that "The constitution doesn't stop at the school house door."

You are well aware that in fact the constitution is on life support everywhere else and was long ago rejected in schools, except in certain instances where no threat to raw govt power exists.
