9.11 investigation

Israeli terrorists still hot to infiltrate/punish New Zealand, get Kiwis involved in wars?

author: leave the kiwis alone, Israel!

You will recall that Mossad agents were caught trying to procure phony NZ passports last year. And isn't this what those who brag about their ability to "think the unthinkable" told us "ze terrorists" would try to do? Just who ARE the Terrorists? Wonder who this would have been blamed upon.

A 30-year-old Israeli man--on an NZ work permit--has been arrested for allegedly contaminating 40,000 litres of milk on a mid Canterbury dairy farm.

Is it because somebody wants the last peaceful segment of the Anglo-British "Oceania" to join the Orwellian fakery of international warmongering, on a suitably fake pretext?

Man arrested after milk contamination
 24 January 2005

A 30-year-old Israeli man has been arrested for allegedly contaminating 40,000 litres of milk on a mid Canterbury dairy farm.

The man, in New Zealand on a work permit, was arrested on a charge of contaminating food, crops, water or other product intended for human consumption after antibiotics were detected in a sample taken from the milk silo on the property last week.

Samples are routinely taken when milk is collected by tankers.

Constable Gary McIntyre of Ashburton police said the charge had been introduced with the Crimes Amendment Act 2003 and it was possible this was the first time anyone had been charged with the offence.

If he is found guilty, the man could face a sentence of up to 10 years' jail.

Mr McIntyre said the farmer was also penalised through receiving a downgrade on his milk, which lessened his payout.

Fonterra media communications officer John Redwood said the company had a thorough testing process and the contaminated milk would have been detected on site.

AdvertisementAdvertisementHe said it was an unusual case and he had not heard of any other incidences of deliberate contamination of milk.

The man is scheduled to appear in Ashburton District Court on January 31.

An source would be nice

I figured a story like this would be all over the New Zealand IMC site with lots of articles about it. But I'm not seeing that.

A news source reference from New Zealand would be nice. That's especially important for stories being posted at remote sites where the same story is not appearing on local sites.

The Long Memory of Mossad

29.Jan.2005 07:29

The story can also be found on NewZealandNews.Net. The sabotage of the Fonterra milk facility could be related to the Joel Hayward Thesis Affair. Go to vho.org/tr/2003/4/fudge439-448.html for a comprehensive article on the matter.

Apparently, if the two are linked, the Mossad has a long memory and is driven by revenge, no matter how long it takes against anyone who dares to interpret the Holocaust in any other way than the Official Zionist version, and anyone who would hire that person. Such nice people!

Following farmer's order

29.Jan.2005 08:24

its not unusual for a farmer to tell his workers to put antibodies in the milk to help ensure that bacteria does not start growing in the milk while its waiting to be shipped. this has not a damm thing to do with Israel or Massad.

You people are so desperate to despise the Jews that you are looking a typical farm practice and looking for some big bad thing going on. the fact that the farm owner was fined confirms that this was a typical industrial no-no.

Not QUITE right "farm hand" (but close)

29.Jan.2005 13:04

Mike ✉ stepbystepfarm  mtdata.com

At least that's not how milk contamination cases come about around here. Cows get sick, and when they are sick, get dosed with antibiotics. Of course they still have to be milked. Having been bred for very large daily milk production any sudden change in milking (trying to "dry them off" instantly) would cause mastitis -- or make the exisiting mastitis infection worse because that is perhaps the most common single ailment for which a dairy cow gets antibiotics. Of course the milk from sick cows on antibiotics is supposed to be dumped, not mixed in to the bulk tank.

Not necessarily done "on farmer's orders". Could also simply be a milkhand getting sloppy or lazy or pissed off at the boss.

BUT -- back to the beginning. I was trying to comment on "good journalistic practice" (what would make our IMC sites better).

whatever mr step by step, sudden squatter on the thread

Good journalistic practice, Mr. Step by Step, would be to do it yourself, like the next commenter after you, insted of wasting time complaining--and then coming back to complain more--without doing anything and still expecting to be patted on the back. I think we should all be aware of such comments by now.

Do you like getting flamed? I don't like getting flamed. The guy even left an address where you coulda "advised" him about how you think he should have handled it. Instead, you hadta put it up for everyone else to see it, as well as your uncalled for comments regarding that person.

If we don't stop attacking each other, we will never have time to attack our oppressors. Or to rephrase; if we spent as much time attacking our oppressors as we do each other, we might get somewhere

"Farm Hand,"

The quote from the article reads, "Mr. McIntyre said the farmer was also penalized through receiving a downgrade on his milk, which lessened his payout."

How did you manage to turn that quote into, "The fact that the farm owner was fined confirms that this was a typical industrial no-no."??

Were you attempting to spread the blame in order to obfuscate the issue? The Israeli was arrested and the farmer wasn't. What's your rationalization regarding that fact?
