Israel ready to strike Iran

12/22/2005 9:00:00 PM GMT

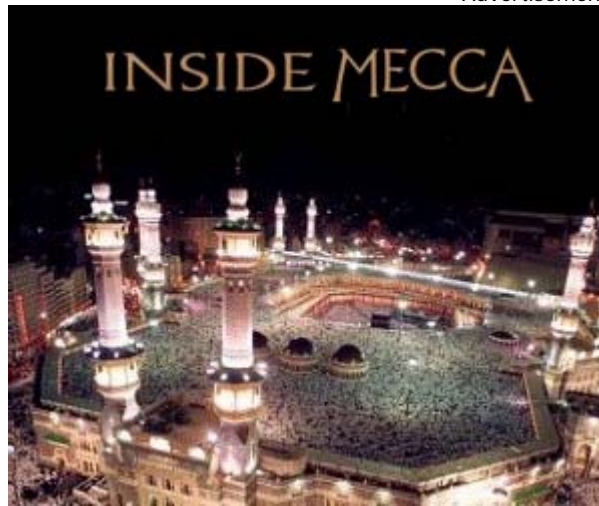

In October, a Russian rocket carried Iran's first spy satellite, the Sinah-1, into orbit. This launch accelerated Israel's plans to strike Tehran's nuclear facilities; the Jewish state is now getting ready for an attack by the end of March.

While Iran's nuclear program is Israel's main concern, its space capabilities are also considered a "point of no return", which determined the actual timing of the Israeli strike. "The Iranians' space program is a matter of deep concern to us," said an Israeli defense official. "If and when we launch an attack on several Iranian targets, the last thing we need is Iranian early warning received by satellite."

Iran wants to master space technology as soon as possible, amid fears the West will seek to impose restrictions on its satellite program like those placed on its NUCLEAR PLANS. According to an article on Global Research.ca, the Sinah-1 is just the first of several Iranian satellites set for Russian launches in the coming months. The Islamic republic is also working on a Shahab-4 missile that could carry an Iranian-built satellite on its orbit.

Thus the Iranians will soon have a satellite network in place to give them early warning of an Israeli attack. However, Iran's satellites won't be as efficient as more powerful Israeli and American space spies that can track the slightest movements; cameras on Israel's Ofek-5 spy satellite have been monitoring the activities in Arab countries and Iran since 2002.

Moreover, Russia signed a $1 billion contract to sell Iran an advanced defense system that can destroy guided missiles and laser-guided bombs, the Sunday Times reports. This too will be ready in the next few months.

The timing of the Israeli attack is closely linked to Israel's political situation. With a parliamentary elections on March 28, Prime Minister ARIEL SHARON, who quit the right-wing Likud to form a new centrist party, wants to look strong. Former PM Benjamin Netanyahu, the newly elected Likud leader, pledged that if Sharon doesn't act against Iran, "then when I form the new Israeli government, we'll do what we did in the past against Saddam's reactor, which gave us 20 years of tranquility."

This all pushed SHARON to rally the country, and stave off this lunge from the right, with a strike against Tehran. "Israel — and not only Israel — cannot accept a nuclear Iran," the Israeli Prime Minister said recently. "We have the ability to deal with this and we're making all the necessary preparations to be ready for such a situation."

A strike against Iran would be popular in Israel, where everyone agrees that Iran cannot be allowed to have the kind of nuclear weapons that Israel itself possesses in such bristling abundance. By the late 1990s, the U.S. intelligence community estimated that Israel possessed between 75-130 nuclear weapons, including missiles and bombs, according to the Federation of American Scientists.

Israel did its homework. The March deadline also comes with an International Atomic Energy Agency report on Iran's NUCLEAR PROGRAM, which could lead to UN sanctions against Tehran, as Israel and the United States want. According to the Sunday Times, SHARON had already ordered Israel's special forces to be at the "highest stage of readiness" for the strike. Commenting on the report, a top White House official said that the threat of a nuclear Iran was moving to the top of the international agenda, and the question "what next?" would have to be answered in the next few months. (Meaning: Sure, March could work for us.)

Only a fool would believe that the Bush administration gave up its ambitions for "full-spectrum dominance" in the Middle East just because Iraq turned into a disaster. To Washington, Iraq has always been a step towards Iran; which was never punished for removing the U.S.'s puppet, the shah, and seizing the American Embassy in Tehran. In fact, Iran is the first step to Washington's ultimate goal; planting U.S.-controlled hands on Middle Eastern and Central Asian oil, thus halting the political rise of China and India, and ensuring a "new American century" of unchallenged profit and privilege. For the elite, of course; as always, those back home have to deal with the bills and the body bags from these war games.

The United States and Israel have already begun a covert war against Iran. With defiant Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, BUSH and SHARON will have little trouble gaining support for such an attack. In the next few months, we'll see the usual charade of "diplomacy" as military plans are being finalized.

happy holidays to all as well. the timing of israels ultimatum coincides with another interesting event. its relevance is dubious, but the message appeals to me. the daedline also coincides with purim, the story of esther, mordecha and haman. it is the holiday that commemorates the integration of jews into persian society after genocidal attempts by a corrupt persian minister. in the end, jews were able to defend themselves from antisemitism so they and persians could live peacefully together. i hope that once again they can eliminate the element of racism and animosity and live in peace.

an israel merican attak on irans nuclear facilities will give iranian leaders more support in iran. even the us and israel worked with and anti-missile defense system and published info. about it's success, it's a well known case that the system will not function more than 60% in best case. that means iran will be given a good chance to test its range missiles at the same time improve them. it will give iran a very good excuse to build the bomb and i think the us is too tired to start a new war with iran. i am sure, israel will suffer in case of attacking iran, despite all the support it will get from the us.

warning. the us navy saw the israeli test in the indian ocean, but the idf denies it did it. these are known capabilities. who knows what they are unwilling to tell or show us. that is not the entire idf, just 8 small, quiet subs.

israel does not have the military capability to locate and destroy iranian nuclear facilities. israel air force cannot operate at such long distances from its bases. the israeli air force has formidable capabilities and enjoys unchallenged supremacy vis a vis the other middle east air powers, but israel cannot use airbases in other middle east states, thus its operational capabilities are reduced when the targets are located far from its territory. furthermore, irans nuclear s are spread throughout the country which is five times the size of iraq and are partly built under mountains making a missile strike ineffective. israel would never risk loseing its military might, its only deterrant for survival and face such a large scale military confrontation alone. but if israel dares to strike iran, then that will be the last action they perform as a nation. if or when the bomb the bunkers in iran, ww3 will be underway, with russia, china and pakistan not far from the action.

the us ohio type sub has 24 tubes. each missile has 8 if equipped with the old w , and up to 14 or 16 on each missile. giving a minimum of 192 per sub, and a maximum of 384 atomic weapons per each sub. we keep 18 of this type for a total between 3,456 and 6,9 atomic weapons within 10 min of most cities.

smarts, the armour of a true battleship would negate a sunburn, but alas, there are no more battleships on active duty. on a carrier, or cvn, it takes many to disable it. the stark is a great example. it was the smallest ocean going shi and it wa by 2 exocets, but only one went off. the sheffield was a larger destroyer, and it sank after only one. the factory specs say you need multiple hits to ensure even a destroyer is disabled or sunk, and a cvn needs even mor due to its size. maybe they just want you to buy more, but i feel they would not put their own product down. the multi layered defense of a carrier group means any missile has to face many linked phased arrays, and p thru many defenses just to hit the outer ring of ships. the standard missile can stop the sunburn. its on all picket ships. when the ageis system is turned on, it removes human error and or reaction time from the equation. as there is always airbores early warning radar around the clock, no dice.

marc you forgot that the sunburn is also a nuclear capable missile that can carry a 200 kiliton nuclear payload or a 750 pound conventional warhead and with a flight pattern that hugs the deck and includes violent end maneuvers to elude enemy defenses .the missile was specifically designed to defeat the us aegis radar defense system should a us navy phalanx point defense somehow manage to detect an incoming sunburn missile the system has only seconds to calculate a fire solution not enough time to take out the intruding missile. the us phalanx defense employs a six barreled gun that fires 3000 depleted uranium rounds a minute but the gun must have precise coordinates to destroy an intruder just in time. the sunburns combined supersonic speed and payload size produce tremendous kinetic energy on impact with devastating consequences for ship and crew so it can break through any armour or defences . did i also mention this missile was ranked the most lethal missile in the world marc us naval commanders operating in the persian gulf face serious challenges that are unique to the littoral such as coastal environment a glance at a map shows why the gulf is nothing but a large lake with one narrow outlet and most of its northern shore such as iran consists of mountainous terrain that affords a commanding tactical advantage over ships operating in gulf waters the rugged northern shore makes for easy concealment of coastal defenses such as mobile missile launchers and also makes their detection problematic although it was not widely reported the us actually lost the battle of the scuds in the first gulf war termed the great scud hunt and for similar reasons saddams mobile scud launchers proved so difficult to detect and destroy over and over again the iraqis fooled allied reconnaissance with decoys that during the course of desert storm the us was unable to confirm even a single k 1 this proved such an embarrassment to the pentagon.

why america and israel can have nuclear weapon and some other countries cant have them. israel continue to kidnap arab lands and kill alot innocents. western countries call it self defense. now they want to attack iran. irans must give them a lesson. its gonna be in china and russia advantage to defend iran if they want to control eastern asia and some part in the middle east. that policy is really a racist one. thats the same thing they did to black couple centuries ago by integrating "black code". at this time black code stipulated a black man did not have right to know how to read and to write. a black men not supposed to sit at the same place as white man etc. today white countries, except china and india , could have nuclear weapon to use on non white countries.but a non white country dont have the rightto have the technology. we all human being if israel could have more than 200 war ahead nuclear weapon why not iran?

the true middleast and global terrorist is israel. it is a failed country which produces nothing of value and whose major export is terrorism by and false flag operations. once again this theocracy is attempting to expand us hedgemony in the middleast all while on the us dole with the hopes of stealing arabian oil to pump through haifa. it's policies and economy are a failure and not sustainable in the long run. but the world is catching on even the people of the us.

an answer seems simple to me. if the us were to cease all financial support for isreal, then the isrealis would have to start dealing fairly and equitably with their neighbors in the middle east. of course the isrealis could take it upon themselves to be good and just to their neighbors. however, given their seeming ongoing inability to recognize the roll they play in the region, this seems unlikely. if they won't be peaceful, then the us should stop enabling them to make war.
