

Futures trading
Profit 2005 futures trading 127.53%
www.eminiswingtrading.com

Antique Reproductions
Quality decorative items Order on line
www.classicreproductions.co.uk

Stock Indices
Get accurate market forecasts. Contact us for a free forecast!
www.TraderTech.com

 [DC Mainpage ]  [DarkConspiracy/Mail ]  [DC Forum Rules ]  [Disclaimer/Terms & Conditions ] Affiliated Board:  [The Reptilian Resistance ]

The United States of AmeriKKKa - Then and now

new topic post reply DarkConspiracy.com Forum Index -> General Discussion

View previous topic :: View next topic

Author

Message

Solve et Coagula

Posted: Fri Aug 25, 2006 5:04 am Post subject: The United States of AmeriKKKa - Then and now quote

Joined: 27 Mar 2006
Posts: 224
Location: St.Gallen, Switzerland

The United States of AmeriKKKa - Then and now

1950 Dow Jones Industrials at 200
2004 Dow Jones Industrials 10,600

1950 Drug trafficking virtually unknown
2004 Drug trafficking endemic

1950 US had the largest gold reserves
2004 Gold reserves?

1950 US world's biggest creditor
2004 US world's biggest debtor

1950 US industrial giant
2004 US no longer self-sufficient

Source:
<http://www.scoop.co.nz/stories/HL0408/S00277.htm>

profile pm email www

Back to top

JVH

Posted: Fri Aug 25, 2006 5:22 am Post subject: quote

Joined: 10 Feb 2004
Posts: 525
Location: Terra

America now is Germany then : Analogies

The German people of the late 1930s imagined themselves to be brave. They saw themselves as the heroic Germans depicted by the Wagnerian Operas, the descendants of the fierce Germanic warriors who had hunted wild boar with nothing but spears and who had defeated three of Rome's mightiest legions in the Tuetenberg Forest.

But in truth, by the 1930s, the German people had become civilized and tamed, culturally obsessed with fine details in both science and society. Their self-image of bravery was both salve and slavery. Germans were required to behave as if they were brave, even when they were not.

It's easy to look back and realize what happened. But at the time the Hitler administration, with the help of the media, looked pretty good to the German people. Hitler was TIME Magazine's Man Of The Year in 1938; the German people assumed they were safe from a tyrant. They lived in a Republic, after all, with strict laws regarding what the government could and more importantly could not do. Their leader was a devoutly religious man, and had even sung with the boy's choir of a monastery in his youth.

The reality was that the German people, as individuals, had lost their courage. The German government preferred it that way as a fearful people are easier to rule than a courageous one. But the German people didn't wish to lose their self-image of courage. So, when confronted with a situation demanding individual courage, in the form of a government gone wrong, the German people simply pretended that the situation did not exist. And in that simple self-deception lay the ruin of an entire nation and the coming of the second World War.

When the Reichstag burned down, most Germans simply refused to believe suggestions that the fire had been staged by the Hitler administration itself. They were afraid to. But so trapped were the Germans by their belief in their own bravery that they willed themselves to be blind to the evidence before their eyes, so that they could nod in agreement with Der Fuhrer while still imagining themselves to have courage, even as they avoided the one situation which most required real courage: to stand up to governmental lies and deceptions.

When the Hitler administration requested temporary extraordinary powers; powers specifically banned under German law, but powers the government claimed they needed to have to deal with the "terrorists", the German people, having already sold their souls to their self-delusions, agreed. The temporary powers were conferred, and, once conferred, lasted until Germany itself was destroyed.

When the Hitler administration staged a phony invasion by Poland, the vast majority of the German people, their own self-image dependant on continuing blindness to their government's deceptions, did not question why Poland would have done something so stupid as to attack Germany, and as a result Germans found themselves in a war.

But the German government knew they ruled a nation of cowards, and knew they had to spend the money to make the new war something cowards could fight and win. They decorated their troops with regalia to make them proud of themselves, further trapping them in their self-image. The Hitler administration copied the parade regalia of ancient Rome, to remind the Germans of the defeat of the legions at the Tuetenberg Forest. Talismans were added from orthodox religions and the occult to fill the soldiers with delusions of mystical strengths and an afterlife if they fell in battle.

Knowing that it takes courage to kill the enemy face to face, the Hitler administration spent vast sums of money on wonder weapons, airplanes, submarines, ultra-long range artillery, the world's first cruise missile and the world's first guided missile, weapons that could be used to kill at a distance, so that those doing the killing need not have to face the reality of what they were doing.

The German people were lured into WW2 not because they were brave, but because they were cowards who wanted to be seen as brave, and found that shooting long range weapons at people they could not see took less courage than standing up to the government's lies and deceptions. Sent into battle by that false image of courage, the Germans were dependent on their wonder-weapons. When the wonder-weapons stopped working, the delusion of grandeur faded, the illusion ended, the Germans lost the war.

...

The American people imagine themselves to be brave. They see themselves as the heroic Americans depicted by Western Movies, the descendants of the fierce patriot warriors who had tamed the frontier and defeated the might of the British Empire.

But in truth, by the dawn of the third millennium, the American people have become civilized and tamed, culturally obsessed with fine details in both science and society. Their self-image of bravery is both salve and slavery. Americans are required to behave as if they are brave, even when they are not.

The American people assume they are safe. They live in a Republic, after all, with strict laws regarding what the government can and more importantly cannot do. Their leader is a devoutly religious man and with the help of the media looks petty good: TIME Magazine's Man Of The Year 2000 and 2004.

The reality is that the American people, as individuals, have lost their courage. The government prefers it that way as a fearful people are easier to rule than a courageous one. But Americans don't wish to lose their self-image of courage. So, when confronted with a situation demanding courage, in the form of a government gone wrong, the American people simply pretend that the situation does not exist.

When the World Trade Towers collapsed, most Americans simply refused to believe suggestions that the attacks had been staged by parties working for the US government itself. Americans were afraid to, even as news reports surfaced proving that the US government had announced plans for the invasion of Afghanistan early in the year, plans into which the attacks on the World Trade Towers which angered the American people into support of the already-planned war fit entirely too conveniently.

Now the US government has requested temporary extraordinary powers, powers specifically banned under Constitutional law, but powers the government is claiming they need to have to deal with the "terrorists". The American people, having already sold their souls to their self-delusions, are agreeing. The temporary powers recently conferred will be no more temporary in America than they were in Germany.

The vast majority of the American people, their own self-image dependant on continuing blindness to the government's deceptions, never question why Afghanistan would have done something so stupid as to attack the United States, and as a result, Americans find themselves in a war.

The US government knows they rule a nation of cowards. The government has had to spend the money to make the new war something cowards can fight. The government has decorated the troops with regalia to make them proud of themselves, further trapping them in their self-image. Talismans are added from orthodox religions and the occult to fill the soldiers with delusions of mystical strengths and an afterlife if they fall in battle.

Knowing that it takes courage to kill the enemy face to face, the United States government has spent vast sums of money on wonder weapons, airplanes, submarines, ultra-long range artillery, cruise missiles, and guided missiles, weapons that kill at a distance, so that those doing the killing need not have to face the reality of what they are doing.

But so trapped are Americans by their belief in their own bravery that they will themselves to be blind to the evidence before their eyes, so that they can nod in agreement with the government while still imagining themselves to have courage, even as they avoid the one situation which most requires real courage; to stand up to the government's lies and deceptions. When the wonder-weapons stop working, the delusion of grandeur fades, the illusion ends, the Americans will have lost ..... themselves.

The lesson from these facts is that it isn't easy to spot a genocidal tyrant when you live with one, especially one whom the press supports and promotes. Tyrants become obvious only when looking back, after what they have done becomes known. The German people did not stand up to the Hitler administration because their media betrayed them, just as the American media is betraying the American people by willingly, voluntarily, even proudly, abandoning its traditional role as watchdog against government abuse.

It is naive, not to mention racist, to assume that tyrants appear only in other nations and that somehow America is immune simply because "we're Americans".

America has escaped the clutches of a dictatorship thus far only through the efforts of those citizens who, unlike the Germans of the 1930s, have the moral courage to stand up and point out where the government is lying to the people. And unless more Americans are willing to have that kind of individual courage, then future generations may well look back on the American people with the same harshness of judgement with which we look back on the 1930s Germans.

History is a great teacher.

Induced emotion with negative intent is what our overlords feed on: it's how the unseen prison exists their occupants kept in invisible bondage by non-perceived shackles and chains establishing out of sight control; dominion@

Back to top

profile pm

Brido

Posted: Fri Aug 25, 2006 9:48 am Post subject:

quote

Joined: 20 Jul 2006
Posts: 313
Location: Tyre

That's a good piece there, but America became a Fascist Dictatorship well before it was even an independent State. 1776 was the real beginning of Fascism in America. The people only recognised it the moment they murdered Kennedy, and it was cemented by the murders of Bobby, Martin Luther King, and Malcolm X, to name but three. What has happened since has been the erosion of civil liberties, the rising tide of a Secret Police State and the mass slumber of an entire people. God only knows how many civilians have been assassinated over the past couple of centuries, and that includes Native Populations of North America, those in South, and the civilians murdered in all sorts of foreign and domestic adventures since the War of Independence. Britain has been the same since The English Elizabeth 1, (Scotland wasn't part of Britain then, so our Elizabeth the 1st, is the reigning Queen Elizabeth 2nd of England), she and her advisers set up probably the blueprint for all Secret Intelligence Agencies and Secret Police States.

Where there is Resistance,
There is Oppression,
Where there is Oppression,
There is Solidarity!!

Back to top

profile pm

Display posts from previous:

new topic

post reply

DarkConspiracy.com Forum Index -> General Discussion

All times are GMT - 6 Hours

Page 1 of 1

Jump to:

You cannot post new topics in this forum
You cannot reply to topics in this forum
You cannot edit your posts in this forum
You cannot delete your posts in this forum
You cannot vote in polls in this forum