I'm a German living in England, a Muslim and a pilot - in today's oppressive neo-fascist climate this means walking a tight rope. And it requires speaking out. I have done so through articles, pamphlets and books, many of which are available on my website Mustaqim Islamic Art and Literature. I am also a regular contributor to the Mathaba News Network. To facilitate responding to current affairs more speedily I have set up this blog and hope readers find it useful.

Iran Revolution ends the Holocaust

The Iranians may not even be aware of it, but their hosting of the recent Holocaust conference may prove to be the most important milestone in their history since the Islamic Revolution under Khomeini. Western politicians and media certainly grasped the significance of the event, with Germany's premier Merkel standing shoulder to shoulder with prime minister Olmert of the "only-democracy-in-the-middle-east-that-is-not-a-democracy" - the apartheid state of Israel - and with BBC television news presenting the bizarre spectacle of discussing, rather than reporting on, an alleged anti-Semitic conference whilst the images in the background showed traditionally clad Orthodox Jews happily in attendance.

When the Islam-hating Western media attacked the prophet Muhammad under the pretence of freedom of speech, Iran retaliated by testing the limits of those freedoms with its own holocaust cartoon competition. In doing so they stumbled across the most jealously guarded dogma of secular Western society, the Holocaust. Whereas questioning and reviling religious beliefs is almost a cornerstone underpinning the mindset of those societies, even genuine historical research into the subject of a subsection of the 60 million who died in the second world war is prohibited and most certainly leads to being ostracised in public: The suffering of the Jews may not be questioned since "if it were to be proven that "The Holocaust" has, in fact, been stage-managed for political reasons in order to promote Israeli interests, then the State of Israel and the United States as public players, and the global Zionist organizations as private lobbying entities would have to accept their share of responsibility for the damage, suffering and hardship they have wrought upon the Middle East and the world and, accordingly, they should be held accountable."

The latter is a quote from communiqué no. 16 of Argentina's growing opposition movement MSRA or Argentine Second Republic Movement, who intend to host a Holocaust conference of their own in order to examine how the Holocaust has been used propagandistically for political ends following the end of World War II. Rather than a one-off event, the Tehran conference is the beginning of the unravelling of the special status that Israel and Zionist Jews enjoy in the world justified by their special suffering at the hands of the Germans. The issue is not whether Jews suffered during World War II but that this suffering has been exploited since in what Finkelstein called the "Holocaust industry". For the last half century, only Jews and retired politicians, the latter in their memoirs, were permitted to voice criticism of Israel and the Zionist lobby. Meanwhile, with some historical distance, many more people are demanding to have a say in the matter, although others, like the Muslim American Society (MAS) Freedom Foundation feel the need to curry favour by stating "True Muslims must never deny the Holocaust" and in the words of Ibrahim Ramey, the Director of their Human and Civil Rights Division: "The evidence of this crime, and the horrible magnitude of this killing, is irrefutable. From sources as varied as Nazi war records, film documentation, and most importantly, the testimony of survivors and witnesses, we know that the mass murder of European Jews was, indeed, the single greatest crime of genocide in the twentieth century." - whereas the communiqué from Argentina questions why, if World War II cost more than 60 million lives in Europe and Asia. mankind's attention is almost solely focused on the suffering of 10% of those victims and millions have been added since then "including almost 2 million Iraqis killed by the Bush Family and their Associates since the First Gulf War in 1991 to date".

Recognising that the label of unique suffering can no longer be worn unchallenged, researchers who questioned certain aspects of the official holocaust story were convicted in political show trials as a warning to others: in France Robert Faurisson or Roger Garaudy, the latter for his substantive book The Founding Myths of Zionism, in Austria David Irving, in Australia Fredrick Toeben, in Germany Gernar Rudolf and Ernst Zundel. But with Iran state-sponsoring a conference on the subject and inviting eminent Rabbis to attend, all this effort has come to naught. The topic will not go away and awkward questions are going to be asked.

As a gentile European I may not ask these questions without penalty, but Rabbi Moishe Arye Friedman, chief Rabbi of the Orthodox anti-Zionist Jewish Community in Vienna, Austria, did not prostrate before the God of Zion and did not hesitate to attend the Tehran conference decried by the Muslim American Society as immoral and motivated by racial hatred. In his address to the conference he stated that the founder of the Zionism, Theodor Herzl, already spoke in his first diaries of a number of six million Jews who were allegedly threatened in Europe and that, according to Herzl, the so-called Jewish state would only have a chance if there was a disaster for these six million European Jews, as well as that the Bolshevists and the British government already used the six million figure in their war propaganda against Germany during the first world war. He further talked about the collaboration between the Nazis and the Zionists, and added that he was sure that the last word about the real or actual number of the victims had not yet been spoken, mentioning that in 1990 the number originally specified of four million victims of Auschwitz had been reduced to approximately 900,000 to 1.1 million whilst the six million figure remained unchallenged.

Now to be consistent, Austrian prosecutors would have to charge the Vienna Chief Rabbi with Holocaust denial, but such a trial would further dent the credibility of the laws protecting the official version of events as well as that of the Shoah story itself, repeatedly embellished by Hollywood productions. It is, therefore, highly unlikely, that the Rabbi will be dragged before a court to answer on charges of anti-Semitism.

Meanwhile there are two strands to the unofficial debate about the holocaust: on the one hand historians demand that this episode of history must not be barred from proper scientific scrutiny in order to separate myth from reality. Guiseppe Furioso, for example, asks why there is no documentary evidence of the gassings nor any mention of it in Churchill's memoirs or by any other political figures of the time.

The other, and more potent, strand is the questioning of the Pax Americana or victor's justice established with the Nuremberg Trials and the propagandistic exploitation of Jewish suffering for imperial ends. Just as president Ahmedinejad of Iran convincingly argues that if the Germans tried to exterminate the Jews then they should be responsible for resettling them in their own country rather than making the Palestinians pay the price, others, like the Argentineans, point out that powers like Israel who stole Palestinian land and the United States of America who stole Native Indian land have not moral authority to play world policemen in the name of the International Community.

The tide is changing and the Argentinean press release points to the fact that its effect is not lost on the pro-Zionist camp: "Interestingly", it says, "the Zionist pro-Israeli mainstream media implicitly admits that any such investigation poses a grave danger to Zionism. Amidst all the insults and threats from such newspapers like the Los Angeles Times, in their 13-Dec-06 issue however, they ran an article called Holocaust denial can be dangerous" which concludes by saying that, "...attacking the legitimacy of the Holocaust allows....(attacking) the legitimacy of Israel, which was created by the United Nations as a result of the Holocaust. If the first act didn't happen, then the second act wasn't necessary." In a way this let the cat out of the bag. Israel's days are numbered if the last great "religious" taboo of not discussing the true facts and dimensions of the holocaust is broken, and with the dollar in accelerating decline and US marines taking a beating in Iraq, Iran - threatened with a pre-emptive strike by the United States for alleged nuclear weapons of mass destruction - seems to have successfully managed to cut the Achilles heel of the current Anglo-Zionist world order.

As for using the Holocaust as propoganda, I certainly agree. As for why the "non-Islamic" world wants to focus on an extermination attempt at totally wiping out a race of people...well, I would tend to agree with you there. Hitler wanted to wipe out many races. Stalin even wiped out his own people. But there are two other issues that need to be addressed with this post.

One...you never mentioned how the Islamic community screams "Crusaders" everytime something doesn't go their way. The Crusades were centuries ago. We're talking about a mere 60 years since the Holocaust.

Two...you might want to look internally, at your own religion, to see who has killed the majority of Iraqis in the last 15 years. I tend to think that the Islamic extremists would prefer to wipe every non-Muslim off the face of the earth. Anyone who believes the Americans are in Iraq to exterminate the Muslims are totally uneducated as to what is happening there. Your bias is extremely evident Mustaqim...though I agree with parts of your post.

Speaking of propoganda, "US Marines taking a beating in Iraq,"...where did you get that totally blatent lie? I would suggest entrenching yourself with those Marines on the ground in Iraq, in order to see this "beating", before you go making propogandist comments that you know nothing about...other than what you read in the Islamic media. You're doing the very thing you claim to hate!!

...you may want to ask Mustaqim where he gets his "rubbish" statements concerning America's intent in Iraq and the "beating that the Marines are taking"...speaking of rubbish!!!

Matthew,

Nobody is disputing that Hitler was a vile piece of work, at least not the author of this blog as far as I can tell. As Muslims and the largest followers of a Semitic religion on Earth, we would have probably also been on the Nazi hit list if the Nazis had got their way and were not stopped.

As for the killing of the Iraqis over the last few years you may want to contemplate on the words of Madeline Albright who stated that half-a-million dead Iraqis was a price worth paying. The civil war in Iraq was cemented the day the Americans invaded and the fight, as with any occupation, is between those who support the occupation and those who are opposed to it. Hence why we recently had some Sunni Tribes in Anbar province locked in battle with the Sunni insurgency.

And the marines are indeed getting a serious beating! They have been confined to a small sector of the green zone, unable to travel even down the airport road without being shot and bombed and unable to travel to large parts of the country as many areas have now been taken over by the insurgents. I suggest you track down some of Patrick Cockburn's writings in The Independent in order to learn how inadequate the US army is. At this point in the neo-con plan the marines should have been entrenched in either Tehran or Damascus but they can't even get past the green zone in Baghdad, if that isn't a drumming I don't know what is.

Soldier In Iraq Says This War Cannot Be Won!

"Morale Of The Platoon At An All-Time Low"

"He Has No Faith In The Politicians Who Sent Him There"

[Thanks to Elaine Brower, The Military Project, who sent this in.]

December 04, 2006, Letters To The Editor, The Oregonian

To the Editor:

I have a son in Iraq: the 1st Armored Division of the Army, stationed at a remote outpost near the hotbed Ramadi.

Last week his platoon lost two to injuries -- one a result of shrapnel to the testicles, the other a leg wound from small arms fire.

They're down to 15 in the platoon. Nearly every day they're out on patrol, generally by foot. Every day, they're vulnerable, their lives held open to the potential of death or injury.

Two weeks ago he called by satellite phone, awakening Amy and me in the dead of the night. Machine gun fire was all around him, the sound of war filling our ears and hearts with grief and fear of loss.

He wanted to tell us that he loves us, that he was on a dangerous patrol and that if anything happened to his life, he would take his love for us to his death and beyond.

He made it through that day and night. As this is written, he is still here with us. His tour was to end the first week in November but he was extended until next February.

He said that the morale of the platoon was at an all-time low.

He said that the war is creating more insurgency, rather than less.

He says that he cannot trust anyone in an Iraqi military uniform.

He said that most of the Iraq people do not want us there.

He says that this war cannot be won!

He has no faith in the politicians who sent him there.

Question, America: Whom would you listen to, the soldier in the field or the padded politician in office in reference to how this war is really going?

For the Flyingimam, funny how you leave out that Hitler recruited Muslims to kill Jews also. I guess that does not fit into your anti-Western, anti-everyone except Muslims mindset. Trying to equate the death of Iraqis in the Gulf Wars and the Holocaust is absolutely retarded. The Gulf Wars were fought to evict Saddam from Kuwait, a legit operation, and the Holocaust was the greatest purge of racism we have ever seen. All Ahmedinejad is doing is trying to get less support for Isreal and the West by turning the Western powers against each other. Nothing more. This is plain as day to see. But since most of the Middle East is uneducated they look up to these so called "religious educators" as there only source of info, which in reality are breeding and brainwashing their youth, just like Nazi Germany mind you, to hate. Make no mistake that terrorist groups have the same salutes as Nazi germany for a reason. It all goes back to the Grand Mufti and his aliiance with Hitler. Iran is building a bomb with the help of China, Russia, & North Korea. Lets not also forget that Ahmedinejad is calling for the total annihilation of Isreal once and for all. Sounds like a peaceful religion to me. If Bush were to say Iran needs to be wiped off the face of the Earth what would come upon us here in the US? Condemnation, sanctions? Bush would be impeached asap. Which I am sure you would love. B/c no liberal Democrat is going to stand up and fight against the Neo-Facsist Muslims and their quest for world domination. Something the Chinese call: Hegemon.

At 3:41 PM, Matthew said...

Well, I'll try to answer this in order.

You're certainly right about Hitler. He would most certainly have had major issues with today's form of Islam...simply because it put someone else on the pedestal other than him....and the fact that most Muslims are not of the Aryan race would have made his hatred that much worse. You're right...Mustaqim did not bring up Hitler. So I'll leave that one alone.

As for the war in Iraq, I don't hold those who haven't been there, and who only read and see what the media portrays, accountable for not knowing what's actually going on. And just for everyone's information....there is a distinct difference in the U.S. Army and the U.S. Marines. With the exception of a couple of Marine Units..in and around Baghdad..the Marines are in the Anbar Province. The Anbar Province includes Ramadi, Fallujah, Hit, Haditha, and the Syrian border. The thing that irritates me more than anything is to hear about how the Americans are getting pounded. What you read, as you quoted those letters, are from single troops, in specific units. Keep in mind that there are 150,000 troops in Iraq. You are seeing a needle in a haystack with these letters. If you were to go to any major industrial organization in the world, you would have more dissent and lower morale than what you are reading from our media. Basically, if we're not blowing things up, and toppling dictators, we must be losing the war and getting pounded...right?

What's so frustrating is that our own policy won't allow our military to do what it needs to get the job done. Militarily, those letters are correct, in that, we can do nothing more than that which we have already done. And that's because of our own policy. But don't be misled into believing that the Marines are taking a beating.

With all this being said, what I have been trying to get Muslims, such as Mustaqim, to admit, is their role in all of this. I guess it's the Americans who are driving trucks into the crowded streets of Baghdad, luring jobless Iraqis to it, then blowing up in their faces!! Why do we always get blamed for the stupid decisions of others? It's time for both sides to take responsibility for their actions. America and its Allies have certainly made mistakes. But it takes two to have a war. I have a hard time understanding why Muslims can't admit their part in this thing. It's really sad that the peaceful Muslim majority is being bullied into submission by the extremists. I'm afraid the extremists will have a devastating effect on the peaceful majority, that will only bring more hatred to the West. Walk the streets of Baghdad, Fallujah, and Ramadi, and you will see this up close and personal. What a shame!

At 4:15 PM, Anonymous said...

>>America and its Allies have certainly made mistakes. But it takes two to have a war.

'Two' to have a war, are you serious. Almost every Muslim organisation in the entire world warned that the war would be a disaster. The Arab league stated that it would be like: 'opening the gates of hell'. Apart from bin Laden, Zarqawi, and a handful of Iraqi puppets in London and Washington no other Muslim wanted this war, therefore we shouldn't accept responsibility for anything. This is an Anglo-Saxon disaster conceived and hatched by leaders proclaiming to be followers of Christ (peace be upon him).

Colin Powell has just stated today that: 'The United States is losing the war in Iraq but sending more troops to Baghdad is not the best way to change course, former Secretary of State Colin Powell said on Face The Nation.' This is hardly 'single troops, in specific units'.

To add insult to injury, the Venezuelans, Cubans, Syrians and Iranians are watching the US army get a hammering and realising that you don't need a million dollar bombs in order to defeat a military 'hyperpower', you just need a handful of strategically placed IED's and a steady flow of coffins returning to the gullible folks back home before they begin to realise how much nonsense they have been fed. As Ahmedinajad has stated, its time to dismantle the discriminatory global system that allows a a handful of selected countries to dictate and terrorise large swaths of the Earth.

At 5:28 PM, Matthew said...

Scary!! You still haven't at one single moment acknowledged the role of Islam in this war. Just keep blaming America for your crazy suicide bombers who MAKE A CONSCIOUS DECISION TO BLOW THEMSELVES UP ALONG WITH INNOCENT PEOPLE TRYING TO PROVIDE FOR THEIR FAMILIES!!! And YES, they are single letters from individual units!!! You have shown your ignorance in many ways here. First, you use letters from the troops, then you use a quote from one American political figure. But the scariest thing in this whole response, is the fact that you seem to follow the actions of Ahmadinejad and praise him for it. Tells me just how brainwashed the Muslim people are. Now I see why you backed Hitler. So why don't you tell us how you really feel..no sugar coating here. What is the goal of Ahmadenejad and the Muslim "Nation"? Is it to dominate the world? Is it to rid the earth of the infidels? Sounds scarily similar to the Nazis.

By the way, I'm proud to be a member of the United States Marine Corps. I have served nobly and proudly in Iraq. I have seen what we have tried to provide for the people of Iraq...and have seen just how much the Islamic extremists love those same Iraqis we are trying to provide a better life for....they just blow them up, cut their heads off, tie them up and execute them....why would I want to serve a God who apparently justifies these measures? Why?

So tell us how you really feel? No sugar coating?

To "Matthew" who sounds very much like that "Marine" who used to post here, I have just this question: Was it not Prescott Bush, great grandfather of the current president, who financed the Nazi party (together with Bert Walker and the Rockefeller gang)? If you don't know what I'm talking about, maybe I have to write a piece including all the facts. If you wouldn't want me to, stop being so smug and self-righteous.

At 6:30 PM, Matthew said...

Self righteous!! I've have admitted on many occasions over a span of a year on your blogs, that America is not without fault in this whole shindig....what I'm looking for is someone in the Muslim community, like yourself, who can admit the shortcomings of your Muslim brethren, who seem to be doing plenty of destruction on their own. You can post whatever you want too. By all means, post it!! It gets really old reading propoganda like your own, blaming everyone but yourself and your internal brethren. Why is that so hard for you? Who's the self righteous one here?!!

At 6:47 PM, Mustaqim said...

What a wally you must be. Of course, I criticise and, if necessary, expose Muslims where they go wrong. Go and read my blog. I exposed the Muslim Council of Britain's backdoor dealings with the gay lobby. In this very post I criticise the Muslim American Society for their ill-informed and submissive announcement to appease the Zionist lobby. But you kept coming back to the Nazi era as if you were an expert of it and tried to wield it as a big stick, insinuating that criticising Israel is akin to supporting Naziism. And so I merely hint at the fact that the current American dynasty (Bush & Co) running this mad war enterprise in Iraq and profiteering greatly (Halliburton) from innocent people's misery were the very same people who engineered the Nazi rise to power and WWII (also profiteering greatly from people's misery, of course), and you go stumm and return to your same old mantra. Now if Muslims had started WWII I would happily condemn them for it and apologise, but get real mate, they didn't, yet they did pay a hefty price for it, just like everybody else.

At 7:05 PM, Matthew said...

However, the only ones you condemn are the ones who go outside the Muslim norm by "uppeasing" the "Zionists". You don't condemn them for their part in this "misery" in the middle east. It seems to me that you are doing the very thing you're accusing me of. You just go right back to your "America and the West is to blame for the world's problems!" I have no doubt that you are a very intelligent person. You obviously do much research and put much time into your writings. That...I respect. What I don't respect is your "blind eye" to the other side of this issue. Like I said, I don't fault you guys completely for your ignorance to what is happening in Iraq...because you are not there seeing what is happening on the ground and in the communities. But I'm sure that the sources you use for your propoganda are the authority on the issues you present. I'm sure I could go just as deeply on issues seeing my side of things. I'm only asking you to see both sides. You turn a blind eye to your own people!! Not the ones that do such an indespicable thing such as appease the "infidels". How bout those who continue to slaughter their own?

Matthew,

Either you don't understand or choose not but the mayhem in Iraq all stems from the fact that the US/UK decided to invade a sovereign country on a pack of lies, decapitate their leadership, standby whilst anarchy and mayhem took root and then imprison, torture and sexually abuse some of their countrymen (incl. both males and females). And then you wonder why poll after poll shows that the majority of Iraqi's want the US out! No matter how benign your intentions may have been people do not like being invaded or occupied and history has shown time and time again that all invaders will be met with resistance.

Now, if you want me to condemn the fact that some Iraqi's have resorted to banditry, crime and terrorism then by all means we condemn that as our religion is one of peace, justice and honesty. Think back to the LA riots when there was a break down of law and order that allowed some crooks to come out of the woodwork and take advantage of the situation. Well that's what's happening in Iraq but on a much larger scale. Yes, there are some truly vile criminals amongst the Iraqi insurgents but don't mistake this by thinking that if we only we could just liquidate the criminals then the rest of the Iraqis would roll over and start tickling our bellies, because it won't happen. The US has been trying this for the past three years but the insurgency is still going strong. The resistance encompasses a much wider array of people than just a bunch of criminals. The problem is on your side, you should wake up and see the world around you, this isn't a playground for American marines to unleash multi-million pound weapons on poor villagers.

At 8:08 PM, Matthew said...

Like I said, I'm not proud of some of the things our military has done to the Iraqis. I understand that. Considering there were 17 resolutions against Sadaam Hussein that led to that war, I'll be glad to bicker with you on the reasons for going in. If Islam is supposed to be peaceful, then I would ask you to tell me what you think of Al Qaida. I'm not talking about the bandit insurgents...I'm talking about Al Qaida. There are tribes in Anbar that are trying to rid Iraq of Al Qaida. The other problem I have is this...The Pope uses words to describe something from several centuries ago about Mohammed. Muslims didn't like it...so instead of using words to debate the Pope, they just decide to burn churches...is this something I should take as being peaceful?

At 8:43 PM, Anonymous said...

Matthew,

Forget what I think of al-Qaida, lets see what the Qur'an states about al-Qaida.

The worshippers of the All-Merciful are they who tread gently upon the earth, and when the ignorant address them, they reply, "Peace!" 25:63

O ye who believe!... [do not] kill yourselves, for truly Allah has been to you Most Merciful. If any do that in rancour and injustice, soon shall We cast him into the Fire..." (4:29-30).

'He who has killed one innocent soul, it is as if he has killed all humanity. And he who has saved one soul, it is as if he has saved all humanity . . .' (5:32).

Every chapter of the Qur'an begins with the verse most gracious, most merciful and as Muslims we are commanded to treat people with respect and justice. al-Qaida and their ilk are truly an abomination. Islam is perfect but that doesn't mean all Muslims are perfect. The narcissistic shenanigans of bin Laden and Zarqawi are a loathsome concept to the vast majority of Muslims. Notice how bin Laden asked Muslims to rise up after 9/11 and out of 1.5 billion people very few heeded his calls. This shows the pacifistic nature of most Muslims. Yes, they are some misguided individuals in our community just like there are in all other communities but don't try to take advantage of this in order to implement a neo-liberal imperialist agenda as Blair/Bush have done in Iraq. bin Laden is about as representative of your average Muslim as Timothy McVeigh was of your average Methodist. But the real issue remains, why/how can a select few countries dictate to other people how they should live, who they should elect and what type of economic policies they should implement. This is the crux of the matter. Demolish the discriminatory global system, establish justice and respect and treat people on an equal footing and then see whether we have peace or not - and that's a message that shouldn't bypass any of the totalitarian leaders in the Middle East either. This is what Islam calls us to. Compare and contrast these noble aims with the aims of the neo-cons and the Project for The New American Century.

At 9:23 PM, Matthew said...

This is the type of response I've been waiting on. Thank you for this response. I understand that the large majority of the Muslim nation is peaceful. I know that because I have seen it first hand. I'm very glad to see Muslims such as yourself speak out against Al Qaida and it's evil ways. I understand your concern and disdain for the Americans. However, I think this is something that needs to be made clear..so that the Islamic nation can understand it. America is not trying to take your religion away from you. We are not trying to oppress anyone. We are trying to give the people of Iraq and Afghanistan a chance to have a choice in the way their government is ran, and who runs it. I'm sure it isn't perfect...nor will it ever be. But what the Muslims need to understand is that we are not trying to take your religion away. We are trying to make things better by giving them choices they have never had. We can't rid ourselves of this hatred amongst different religions if we don't give freedom a chance. Ahmadienijad claims that Iran is a free nations...well..to who? It is free for those who follow the Ayotollah...but isn't free for anyone else. Is it a democracy...or is it a government based on the votes of the Ayotollah only? These people literally live under the knife. Why can't religions live in relative harmony in those countries as they do here in America? So how is giving people more choices the same as forcing our beliefs of others? Hope this makes sense.
