Israeli Subs Have Nukes Aimed at Iranian Sites

Gordon Thomas - American Free Press

American-made Harpoon missiles, armed with nuclear warheads, are now aimed by Israel's fleet of Dolphin-class submarines against Iran's nuclear facilities.

Following September's exclusive report in American Free Press about Israel's submarine nuclear attack capability, over 100 Harpoon cruise missiles have been secretly airlifted to the remote island of Diego Garcia, a joint UK-U.S. base in the Indian Ocean.

The three Israeli submarines that arrived at the base early this month were each loaded with 24 Harpoon missiles.

They then set sail for the Gulf of Oman—bringing Iran's nuclear facilities all within range of the submarines' payloads.

The decision to launch them is entirely in the hands of Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon. Just as Sharon gave Washington only a short warning before he gave the order to attack an alleged terrorist camp deep inside Syria, he has made it clear to Washington that the same rule of engagement will apply if it comes to launching the Harpoons.

Sharon made his position clear in a telephone call to President Bush the day after the attack on Syria.

According to one Israeli source, Bush said he "just wanted to be kept in formed."

Credible intelligence sources say the reality is that Sharon believes he would have the support of Bush if he did launch an attack.

But an indication of the deepening concern that some members of the Bush administration now feel is that National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice allowed one of her senior aides to confirm AFP's September report to The Los Angeles Times and London's Guardian newspaper.

Both drew heavily on the original American Free Press story. The senior Pentagon and State Department sources for AFP's first story about Israel's Dolphin-class submarines told AFP exclusively that, in the words of one high-level Pentagon source, "matters have now advanced considerably, and for the first time Rice is sounding alarm bells in the Oval Office."

Rice's decision to leak is also the first clear indication of her concerns over Israel—as well as her own direct challenge to the authority of Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld.

Rice is engaged in an internal power struggle with Rumsfeld—and has chosen to use what she sees as his failure in the Middle East to harness Sharon's behavior as her launch pad to have the secretary of state ousted.

"Rice has a long-term strategy to become secretary of state. While Rumsfeld is no supporter of Powell, he knows that having Rice in charge of the State Department would give her more power than she even has now. And there is also the ultimate ambition for Condi to be Bush's running mate. Her own inner circle says that she would relish a face-off with Hillary Clinton in 2008. If Condi became vice president, then she is but a step away from becoming the first black woman in the White House. That is what is driving her," said a senior Washington analyst.

Rice Boiling

Meantime, Rice's concerns have deepened following Sharon's stark warning last Sunday that "states harboring terrorists are legitimate targets."

Aides in Tel Aviv have confirmed to American Free Press that "Iran and Syria are top of that list—with Iran in the top spot."

The revelation comes at a time of rapidly escalating tensions in the region.

Israel's senior Foreign Ministry spokesman, Gideon Meir, insisted "any country that harbors a threat to Israel is a legitimate target for us out of self-defense."

Today, American Free Press can reveal, again for the first time, that a team of U.S. computer specialists flew to Diego Garcia to fit the latest version of the software known as "over the horizon." This would allow a Harpoon to hit Iran's nuclear establishments with pinpoint accuracy.

Originally developed by Inslaw, the Washington-based computer software company, the over-the-horizon capability has been enhanced to handle the sophisticated electronics of the Harpoon missiles.

In the meantime, Sharon has ordered Mossad to put together a specialist team to infiltrate Iran. Their mission is to snatch some of the scientists working in the country's nuclear facilities at Natanz, Arak and Saghand.

P{margin:0;} UL{margin-bottom:0;margin-top:0;margin-right: 16; padding-right:0;} OL{margin-bottom:0;margin-top:0;margin-right: 32; padding-right:0;} Outgoing Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder approved the discounted sale of two German-made submarines to Israel, moments before sealing his term in office, the German daily Der Spiegel reported Saturday.

The newspaper reported that the two submarines of the Dolphin class will be built in Kiel at a cost of USD 1.17 billion.

The German federal government, which is being replaced on Thursday by a new coalition headed by Angela Merkel, will cover a third of the cost.

Germany granted Israel two Dolphin submarines in the nineties soon after the Gulf War in a sign of goodwill and in order to strengthen the friendly ties between the two countries. Israel bought a third submarine of the same brand soon after the donation.

Schroeder's Social Democrat-Greens government had long been hesitant about selling more submarines, according to German media reports, over fears Israel could arm the Dolphins with nuclear weapons and threaten Middle East stability.

But according to Israeli security sources, the dispute was over whether Germany should charge the full price. Der Spiegel and Focus magazine said on Saturday that Germany had indeed long resisted Israel's request to help finance the cost of the submarines.

The deal is the second of its kind struck by Schroeder's government over the last two months. Tow weeks ago a multi-million dollar arms sale deal was agreed upon with Turkey. @->--

Iran in gas deal with European firms

Saturday 25 February 2006, 12:57 Makka Time, 9:57 GMT Al Jazeera

Iran will next week grant Total, Shell and Repsol upstream development contracts in the Gulf's giant South Pars gas field, an Iranian state oil firm says.

Iran intends to use phases 11 and 13 of South Pars, which sits on the world's biggest reservoir of natural gas, to produce liquefied natural gas (LNG).

The Islamic Republic hopes to export its first LNG shipments in 2009.

A spokesman for the Pars Oil and Gas Company said on Saturday: "The signings will be late this week."

The Iranian working week starts on Saturday and ends on Wednesday or Thursday, depending on the institution.

Total is planning to develop phase 11 of South Pars to produce LNG, gas super-cooled to liquid for loading onto tankers, in a project called Pars LNG.

Shell and Repsol are planning to do the same with phase 13, a project called Persian LNG.

Billion dollar deal

Akbar Torkan, managing director of the Pars Oil and Gas Company, was quoted by the Abrar-e Eqtesadi financial daily as saying the contract to develop phase 11 would be worth $1.2-$1.4 billion.

The phase 13 deal would be worth $1.5 billion, he added.

Although it sits on the world's second biggest reserves of natural gas, Iran has been very slow to develop exports.

Qatar, which draws its gas from the same Gulf reservoir, is a long-established LNG exporter.

Iran has been reported to the UN Security Council for possible sanctions after failing to convince the world that its atomic ambitions are entirely peaceful.

However, Iran has struck a defiant tone on its oil and gas industry, saying industrialised countries would never dare to embargo hydrocarbons from Opec's number two exporter while oil prices remain high.

Torkan also told the ISNA students news agency that Pars Oil and Gas Company had tendered phases 19-21 of South Pars.

shouldn't someone be referring Israel to the UN for having WMDs. Israel doesn't have nukes? Does it? When were the UN inspectors there?

What the UK and US will never do is put nuke missiles on Israeli subs. Ain't ever gonna happen. Russia taps the same 'secure' lines the yanks do, as does China, France, Britain, putting nukes on Shitzaeli subs violates enough treaties for Russia or China to force USUKs Iran hand at UN. It'd be a really dumb move, even for skanks.

This article encompasses much of what I dislike about reports of this nature. To me they are very dismissible as fake information or as information intended to give a desired effect.

Look...

How come all these people in 'high level' positions rabbiting out all this info? Come on! We are probably being spun here. Dear Lord, there's more chatter than an Ann Summers party.

Can harpoons simply be placed in any sub, in such a casual manner as implied by this article.? Next they'll be launching them from paper airplanes!

In the immortalised words of Jimmy Cricket...

and there's more:

_a team of U.S. computer specialists flew

Following September's exclusive report in American Free Press about Israel's submarine nuclear attack capability, over 100 Harpoon cruise missiles have been secretly airlifted to the remote island of Diego Garcia, a joint UK-U.S. base in the Indian Ocean.

Obviously, the American Free Press article is September 2004 (pre-2004 US 'elections'). At that time Rice was not yet Sec State, which she became after the 2004 'elections'. Sharon still had his brain back then.

The article claims to have evidence that israeli subs took on US guided missiles at Diego Garcia. Presumably, israel adds its own nuke warheads to these missiles. No way would US military hand over actual nukes to another country, especially a rogue nation & loose cannon in the Middle East.

Makes one wonder about the supposed forthcoming war between ZUSUK & Iran. If huge oil majors have development contracts for Iranian natural gas, they cannot be supporting a hot war at this stage. One really hopes this is true.

Once again, there is no mention here of the proposed Iranian Oil Bourse said to commence business on 20 March 2006. Is it real, or isn't it?

I not saying shitsrayhell
by Mike-Malaysia on 03.03.2006 [11:55]

doesn't have nuclear launchable weapons on subs. It may well do. Given that Germany is said to have 'given' (for free) some subs to them and the UK supplies them with duterium and the US delivers its bunker busters over there for them and lets that dirty dimona blot on the landscape shurn out its toxic crap unchecked, I can well believe the scumbags do have missiles.

But the way the article is drawn out and so much anonymous high level sources are spilling the beans left right and centre means something. Given the information contaainted within, it apears to be trying to scare off the Iranians and anyone else that doesn't bend over for the bit of ZUSUK rumpy pumpy!

Who benefits? ZUSUK therefore its probably jus rubbish from them which may have succered one of us in

I cant them having fights. They both love to get involved with war, killing foreigners and $ucking the heck out of the US economy. Whats there to fight about? - who gets to kill the greatest number?

Well, I must admit I've not ever thought about it before, but if you say they fight then I'll take it that they are.
