Police said they stopped the van driven by the man after receiving a tip from another driver that someone in a vehicle matching its description was taking pictures of the tunnel.

Investigators took the man into custody. Troopers remained at the scene to examine his car.

According to the news release, the man was visiting the country legally and troopers were told that he was taking pictures of the tunnel because he was not used to seeing facilities like it in Israel.

The man was released without charges, police said.
