Ritual Murder of Children by Jews in Russia Reported by Russian Paper

Publication time: 21 September 2006, 15:20

On April 16, 2005, just a week before the beginning of the Jewish Passover on April 23, five children, Muslim and Christian, "disappeared" in the Russian Siberian city of Krasnoyarsk. Four weeks later their burnt bodies were found in a sewage pit.

A popular Russian daily, Komsomolskaya Pravda, writes today that many Russians in the city are convinced that the children were ritually murdered by local Jews who later burnt their bodies to conceal the crime and prevent experts from finding in the bodies the lack of blood which is used by Hasidic Jews for ritual purposes.

Few people in the city believe that the Jewish murderers ever come to trial and that the murders would be properly clarified by police investigators in present-day new democratic Russia.

Vladimir Salamatov, the lawyer representing the interests of the parents of the murdered children, told the paper that 5 independent expertises confirmed the lack of hemoglobine (red substance in human blood) in all burnt bodies.

"I am sure that it was a ritual murder with exsanguination", he said.

Evgeny Kazantsev, the Head of Untraditional Religious Groups Monitoring Center, agrees that it was a ritual murder.

A Moscow independent researcher and journalist, Mikhail Nazarov, stresses that there is a large Jewish community in Krasnoyarsk and that the authorities do their best to conceal this ritual murder committed by the Jews. A witness reported seeing the bodies of the children thrown intact in the pit as proscribed by the Jewish ritual and then somebody burnt them to conceal ritual wounds in specific places of the bodies made for the exsanguination, Mr Nazarov said.

The researcher reminded of a well-known case of the ritual murder of a 10-year-old Christian child, Andyusha Yushchinsky in Kiev in 1913. A local Jewish community activist, Beilis, was arrested and accused of the murder and later released by a court because of insufficient evidence, with a minor overweight among the jury.

"The murder of Andryusha Yushchinsky also took place few days before the Jewish Passover, his body was also exsanguinated and thrown off without burial", Mr Nazarov said.

"And Beilis belonged to the same Lubavichi Hasidic branch of Judaism as
