Charlie Sheen 9/11 Story Goes Viral

Alex Jones appears on CNN, poll says three-quarters plus support Sheen

Paul Joseph Watson & Alex Jones/Prison Planet.com | March 24 2006

The Charlie Sheen 9/11 story is set to roll into Friday still at the height of its controversy now being the discussion of thousands of forums and blogs, more mainstream coverage and Thursday night's appearance of Alex Jones on CNN's Showbiz Tonight. Meanwhile, a CNN poll shows that three-quarters of Americans support Sheen's stance.

The stage was set early Thursday morning when numerous mainstream hit pieces started popping up as the attack dogs went after Sheen for voicing his suspicions about 9/11 Monday on the Alex Jones Show, in part due to a Wednesday night CNN slot on Showbiz Tonight that succeeded in stoking the flames. The CNN piece was surprisingly balanced, with little credence being given to the views of the still official story apologist National Geographic supervising producer Nicole Rittenmeyer. Turns out that the writer and head producer of the 'Inside 9/11' National Geographic series was the work of Jonathan David Towers of Towers Productions from Chicago. Towers has proven himself to be a willing propagandist for the elite time and time again.

According to American Free Press writer Chris Bollyn,

"Jonathan Towers grew up in a suburb of New York and is a 1982 graduate of Yale University. Fleshing Out Skull & Bones (2003) by Kris Millegan lists Mr. Towers as a 1982 initiate of Yale's super-secret elitist fraternity known as The Order of Skull & Bones.

President George W. Bush belongs to this secret and powerful fraternity, as does his father and grandfather. Sen. John F. Kerry is also a member.

The National Geographic Channel, which carries the program, is primarily controlled by Rupert Murdoch's News Corp., which might lead one to ask which nation is meant by "national."

Neo-Con apologist Laura Ingraham spent the majority of her 9am-12pm ET show
