Brown, supporters dub effort 'Freedom University'

'Zionist Illuminati' the culprits, he says

Although the comparisons between Ed Brown's stand at his Plainfield home and deaths at Waco continue to circulate among sympathetic bloggers, talk radio hosts and militia leaders, Brown and his friends have decided to opt for a different metaphor

Bill Miller, a friend of Brown's who joined him at the house to become his "chief of staff" last week, sent a message to supporters Jan. 25 that said they'd replaced the Waco paradigm. Henceforth, he wrote, they would be referring to the situation as "Operation Alamo."

"First to exercise some basic gallows humor, in that, we realize that in the event of an unlawful move against Ed Brown by the federales, carrying out an un-Constitutional policy by the IRS, validated by a bogus Soviet Union style sham trial, we the People here would be no more than a speed bump as the situation now stands," Miller wrote of his decision to adopt the title.

Three days later, he chose another name, "Freedom University."

"That (Operation Alamo) metaphor worked for a brief time, as we made a point here regarding resolution, required in defense of liberty," Miller wrote in an e-mail. "Now we are transmogrifying this stand into Freedom University."

At Freedom University, Miller said, Brown can spread his vision of a peaceful and libertarian future.

Brown, who told a reporter Thursday that he'd stopped talking to the mainstream media, gave listeners to an internet radio station Friday a sense of how he sees his educational mission.

"We are fed up with the Zionist Illuminati," he said, referring to the group he believes is behind an international conspiracy to rule the world. He has said that he believes the judge who presided over his case and the U.S. Attorney for New Hampshire are members. "This is a warning. You can do whatever you want to me. My job is getting the message out . . . once this thing starts, we're going to seek them out and hunt them down."
