Anti-Bush Graffiti: 25 Countries, Six Continents

Print This Post Print This Post Comments \(156\) Written by Laura Copeland

Barack Obama recently made headlines with his eight-day tour of Europe and the Middle East.

Many analysts here and abroad agree it was a smart political move for the U.S. presidential nominee, but some argue it was just a drop in a substantial bucket of goodwill needed to improve international relations with America.

As President George W. Bush nears the end of a mostly disastrous eight-year term, he too should be given credit for public appearances overseas.

Traveling by air — er, compressed air, that is — and landing on everything from brick walls to telephone poles to the doors of trash chutes, Bush boasts a presence in just about every last nook in the world.

Found your link on StumbleUpon... it's fascinating, but not surprising, how hated Bush is worldwide. The perception one gets from the "fair and balanced" press is that he has a stronghold of support in the US, but even his fellow republicans don't seem to fancy him.

But in the fall of all of this, America will elect a Muslim-raised leader that will bleed her dry. It looks as if there really is no hope. I guess the USA should have cowered and waited to see what happened next after 9-11. Nobody disagrees that Bush took things too far. But what would others have done? What would John Kerry had done? What would the famous marketing liar and hypocrite Al Gore had done? If Al Gore is not a show of American Capitalism at its best, I don't know what is.

Necessary correction: Obama is not Muslim-raised. He was raised by a White American mother and grandparents who were not Muslim. Unfortunately for your argument, Obama is Christian... which is what the rest of the Presidents of the US, good and bad, have been so the trend of Christians will continue.

As for what the others would have done, who knows? They didn't have a chance to prove themselves, did they? So, we will never know.

2. What would others have done? Just because one moron chooses to infuriate the world and unilaterally invade another country under false pretenses doesn't mean that EVERYONE who might have been elected president would choose to infuriate the world and unilaterally invade another country. That is an absolutely ludicrous argument. Bush is an incompetent failure, but that doesn't mean that anyone else would have been an incompetent failure, too.

1. Obama is now a christian.
2. What does it matter if he is Muslim??? Last time I checked this country had FREEDOM OF RELIGION. (also in my case, freedom to lack a religion)
3. How will he bleed her dry? The man is light years ahead of McCain who still doesn't realize Czechoslovakia is not a country (czech republic) thinks Iraq/Pakistan share a border (afghanistan/pakistan) and CAN'T EVEN USE THE INTERNET!!!!

Obama said MONTHS AGO he would be open to talking with Iran...Bush called him an "appeaser" which was all over the news.....Just this past week, what did Bush do?.....Sent the third highest official in the State department to talk with Iran.....HMMMMM? Seems Obama is light years ahead and it's simply because THE MAN IS INTELLIGENT!!!!

Also, Obama finished Magna Cum Laude from HARVARD and McCain finished 894 out of 899 at the Naval Academy....Don't hate a man because of the color of his skin nor his religion. The only knock on him is his "lack of experience" yet go google "McCain economy" and you'll really see lack of experience....

Probably start a random war or two. Start taking away American's freedoms. Destroy the constitution. Ruin the economy. Open concentration camps (kind a like Gitmo) to hold people with different religions. Send thousands of young Americans to die...

Wait... Hasn't Bush already done all that? But that cant be he is a CHRISTIAN. No say it isn't true...

Look even if Obama was a Muslim (which he is not) he couldn't make the country any worse than it is. So enough with this xenophobic racist bullshit.

Creating a communist police state is NOT a proper response to terrorism. Nothing that has been done since 9/11 has done anything to make Americans safer - not the new wars, not the wide open border with Mexico, not the Stasi-like surveillance of everyone EXCEPT actual terrorists. Good police work and letters of Marquee and Repisal would have been all that was needed. But NOOOO, we had to outdo the Soviets, right? That's your solution to everything, increase the size and power of the state even when it fails you miserably? IF the terrorists hated us for our freedoms they won't be hating us for long with people of your mindset running things.

Of course all of you hate America as much as you hate Bush. So what do you care. The only reason the rest of the world is on Bushes' back is because our anti-american media has generated a firestorm of american hatred. All I can say is, that if we respond to terror the way all of you want us too. We won't have to worry about bad presidents anymore, because we wont be around to elect one.

It is NOT anti-American or unpatriotic to question the president, even if he is an unelected fraud president. The way Greg suggest responding to terror is what got America into the shit in the first place. You sound like a caricature from Fox News Channel. Are you for real?

But seriously if you are going to preach so much BS hate, then at least do it right. And just out of curiosity as to how crazy you are, please explain the "anti-American (American has a capital letter) media firestorm" cause I have no idea. Explain why would the media, which is owned by American companies, be anti-American? Are all these people traitors? Communists? Or what? And what exactly would they gain from that? Let me guess do you watch FOX?

Joe... dude really?

Look I get the whole anarchy/flip the bird to "the man" thing, but seriously... Disney?

Fair enough "exploiting labor world wide" but name one company that doesn't. But also please explain what you mean by "exploit" because I have never heard of Disney using child labor nor sweat shops, unlike some other companies... Mostly because it might tarnish their family friendly image.

So yeh they have toys and stuff made in other countries but what company doesn't. Did you know that the majority of American flags are made in China? So what does that say about our fine country? And most medication comes from China, so does that mean doctors are evil capitalists too?

As for the racism thing... eh what? Did you know old Walt was one of the few people to speak out against racism. Have you ever noticed some of the positive symbolism in Disney movies? Don't read the shit from extreme Christians who claim racism and red flag at anything. People also blame Disney for poor moral messages and giving kids an unrealistic ideas of happiness and physical appearance. People love to point fingers in case you haven't noticed (like what your doing in your post) eg movies make you violent etc.

That's just people. Read actual analysis from people who actually understand movies not crazy Christians clinging to their Bible.

But where do you get this Muslim stereotyping from?

So before you go on a "boycott everything" rant... just don't... not every company is completely evil. And being just a bit evil is good by todays standards.

I'm not trying to defend them but that was really over the top... Get some focus in your argument... Taking shit like that is too right wing Republican for my liking.

Because Disney's main source of inspiration for decades came from European fairy tales.

As for the more recent animated films

- the Arabian Nights are fairly well known outside of the Middle East
- Greek Mythology has plenty of established characters for a minimal effort plot
- in the case of Mulan, the story is so old the Huns can be portrayed as the bad guys without making anyone mad or taking a political stance
- a black princess showing up in any of these would be out of place for the time and location

You can argue that Disney could have picked an African legend to animate but honestly, they aren't exactly mainstream and would have been a harder sell in an ignorant market that was losing interest in traditional animation.

Firstly on what basis are you making these claims, several, if not most, European countries have a much higher quality of life than USA, DO NOT INVADE FOREIGN COUNTRIES, have a public welfare system and a better economy. For example after WWII Germany was literally the poorest country in the world, now it is the 3rd largest economy, in less than 100 years.

If anything it was a risky political move. All the international goodwill in the world won't be worth a damn if he can't win the American election. Just to note, Congress has never officially declared the Iraq conflict as war. We are, technically, not at war. Bush sent his troops while Congress was out of session.

But your sentiment was correct. If they wanted, Congress could just stop funding for the military actions in Iraq and Bush would be forced to end it or risk losing a severe war of attrition. So, ultimately, the checks and balances are in place for Congress to end the conflict - not that they ever would.

It is a conundrum: Once Bush deployed troops without a declaration of war, Congress's only recourse to stop it is to refuse to fund it...but at the time of deployment, Congress was dominated by members of Bush's own party who were not going to move against him. Four years later, when Bush's party lost their control of Congress due almost entirely to public opposition to the war, the opposition Democrats had a one-vote majority in the Senate...but that was provided by Senator Lieberman, a PRO-WAR Democrat who won re-election as an independent when the Democrats in his home state refused to renominate him because of his stance. With Lieberman refusing to back the Democrats on any vote relating to the war, trying to stop funding became impossible. Then again, it might have failed anyway, since there has always been a strong aversion to cutting funding to soldiers actually engaged in combat. It is often compared to sending them into harm's way but denying them bullets. It is why Abraham Lincoln, despite voting against the declaration of war against Mexico, still voted to fund the campaign once the declaration had passed. He said he opposed the war, but once it became certain he was not going to jeopardize the lives of the troops. So how much of a "check" or "balance" is this? So long as the President is left with undisputed authority as Commander in Chief of the armed forces he can do pretty much what he wants and just dare Congress to disagree.

Your point being? That having a shorter Constitution means... eh? More freedom?... Hmm... That's a pretty weird point.

And history already has decided: an economy ruined, a country hated, over 4000 of our soldiers lost (and counting), Americans rights being destroyed and a president with the lowest approval rating ever. What more do you need? You think in the last part of his presidency those soldiers will "come back?" and the economy will be fixed magically. Cus if you do, your wrong. He has left a huge mess that will take a long time to clean up.

And as for the rest of the world... Eh yeh their opinions do matter especially since we owe them so much money. And we get almost all our oil for those "foreign nations." Also did you notice how many other countries are involved in Bush's war on terror... British, Germans, Japanese, Canadians, Aussies etc etc etc...

Its a nice point and all. But you forgot to mention that Iraq had nothing to do with terrorism. The terrorists were in Afganistan, Bush lied to the people and started a war with Iraq over non existent WMDs. Thats the problem. In his entire 2 terms in office he still has failed to fight his war on terror and get Bin Laden.

And enough with the America wont "roll over and forget it like the rest of the world" give me a break. You do know that thousands of troops from other countries are fighting the war on terror... Dont you?

And you know what your right were not like the rest of the world, meaning that I cant think of any other country (bar dictatorships) that would let a joke of a president have TWO terms and let the country go to waste at the hands of one person with such a low approval rating. So your right, were not like other countries. We fight terrorists but when are rights and freedoms come into question we "roll over and forget it."

You can go back to watching Fox now.

If you think that Saddam had nothing to do with terror or terrorists, you are indeed delusional. If you look at the generations of hate that has been perpetrated in the name of Allah by people like Saddam and Ayatollah types in their just propagation of religious freedoms. The freedom they promote is not like the freedom those graffiti sprayers have. The reason we don't see the opposing view spray painted on peoples property through out the world is that those mocked will kill the artists in many cases. The real tyrants must be opposed. Spray an anti Chinese message on a wall in Tibet or Sudan..I hope your travels will show you what they have me, that war is always bad, but it is often better than the alternative of living under the oppression of a dictator. It was only after a decade of cease fire violations from an unjust invasion by Iraq that we "invaded" the violators country. The people of Iraq had years of our support and more than one opportunity to overthrow the brutal regime of Saddam and chose to live in his terror instead.

Just a correction... The one where Bush is riding a missile waving a cowboy hat, the caption was:

"Joyfully riding a missile — gut protruding, cowboy hat waving — Bush's embodiment of Texan stereotypes is as much the subject of this artist's mockery as the President's flippant attitude toward explosives."

It's actually a play on a famous movie scene. Dr. Strangelove: How I learned to stop worrying and love the bomb- is the name of the movie. Made in the early sixties, there is a scene where a character seems to lose himself in being caught up in the war and goes down on the missile in that same pose waving around a cowboy hat.

So, before you start all your Bush bashing, you should at least get this right. Makes me wonder what else is wrong here...

Ok I see your point however, I still disagree. You cannot deny that some of these pro Bush comments are ridiculous. I am sorry but calling anyone who dislikes Bush a Communist or a non patriot, is a joke. And telling them to "get out" is even worse. Isn't America a democracy? It used to be.

And I never once said that "every conservative is an ignorant redneck," but some of them are, same with liberals. And I'm sorry you are so sensitive to the word "asshole" but I do see it as fitting for these people, it is after all my opinion. So, instead of being upset by the crude language on the internet maybe you should be more concerned as to what your terrible president has done to your country.

And sorry for my "elementary grammar and punctuation" but English is not my first language. Though, I do not expect Republicans to be very open minded of other cultures. But it's nice of you to assume that every poster is a American.

This is part of the bullshit I hate so much, he lumps everyone together and brands them all terrorists, and anyone from any country that looks like an "enemy of America and Freedom" without actually putting any consideration into who these people are and the millions of people he is isolating.

It is one thing that pisses me off in general about Americans (some not all) they fear of anyone who resembles, dare a say it... a "Muslim."

Just look at some of the posts above about Obama being a Muslim. Even though he is NOT a Muslim, so fucking what if he was! What would it matter?! He would still make a better president than the so called "god fearing Christian" that's in office now. The same Christian who created

I've lived in the Middle East for the past 13 years, and people there still look to America with hope and interest, and most of the people i know there, if given the opportunity, would gladly move to the US in hopes of a better future for their decendancts sp? Because they understand that there is a significant difference between the domestic Americans and our countries foreign policy. All of those who visited who were of arab decent had a good time when they went on holiday, met many nice people and came away feeling that Americans in general are very friendly, inviting people...However, they got fucked at immigration. All, i repeat, ALL of them those who looked like arabs were held for between 1 and in one case, 6 hours, because they were selected for ""random searches"". These people are not ani-american, they are anti big-government, anti-conglomerate, and hate how they see corporations worming their way into governments around the world. And American (personified internationally as Bush) represents this developing problem perfectly. So, don't go connecting anti-bush sentiments with anti-american sentements. Too much paranoia can cause you to reach some seriously wrong conclusions, as history has shown us what happens when countries start becoming paranoid of their neighbors.

Now about the US economy.

More Reasons Why the US Economy is Collapsing:

- #1. The United States government is currently running a budget deficit of $1.8 billion/day. Too much deficit will create a weaker American dollar and cripple the US economy.
- #2. The US National Debt is $8 trillion+. It has to be paid back eventually by raising taxes.
- #3. Oil prices are $100+ per crude barrel, there is a shortage of oil refineries and demand is growing due to more car drivers world wide.
- #4. China's economy is now bigger than the United States and China is now the centre of the global economy.
- #5. China's trade exports out-matches the United States (ie. they can build cars/trucks/SUVs for half the price).
- #6. English is becoming less important as an international business language. Mandarin Chinese is becoming more important.
- #7. Global warming is causing drought and shortages of grain crops, causing bread and flour prices to skyrocket.
- #8. US universities aren't creating enough graduates to compete on the global market. Tuition is too expensive and there isn't enough university professors.
- #9. The babyboomers are retiring, creating a shortage of skilled workers.
- #10. The White House is being complacent about the US economy and is ignoring the possibility of a depression.
- #11. Automobile companies keep laying off unionized workers and moving their factories to China. The only car company building new plants and hiring workers in North America is Japanese car-maker Toyota (which only hires non-union workers).
- #12. The US government sold off the bulk of its oil/gasoline reserves in 2002. It no longer has large stocks of oil reserves in case of a national shortage.
- #13. Adult American taxpayers have an average of $48,000 in debt due to credit cards, mortgages, university debts, etc. Now that the economy has gone sour many are losing their houses or declaring bankruptcy.
- #14. The US dollar is notoriously easy to make counterfeit bills of. Thanks to modern computer printers, counterfeit is reasonably easy to make.
- #15. The US economy still has not recovered from 9/11.
- #16. The US economy relies on the consumption of goods at a decadent rate. If something happens that throws the economy for a loop, it can very easily fall into a depression.
- #17. Global Warming is causing record hurricanes, storms, floods and ecological disasters are destroying homes & businesses in the United States. In addition to wrecking havoc and raising insurance prices, the storms also prevent oil rigs from drilling in the Gulf of Mexico, causing oil shortages.
- #18. The health problems resulting from high obesity and unhealthy diets combined with a shortage of doctors is causing the US healthcare system to become highly capitalized so that only the wealthy and middle class can afford health care.
- #19. Rising costs of airplane flights are stifling business trips by companies seeking to do business.
- #20. Foreign investors are pulling out of the United States and investing in Asia instead.
- #21. Five years of drought and Global Warming has caused many farmers in the American mid-west to declare bankruptcy. The US is facing a food shortage if current drought trends continue. People aren't building enough green houses to grow extra food.

Well now perhaps some of you will think this is off topic, but its not, because of these kind of actions that are taken by the US gov with G. W. Bush as its current leader these kind of graffities appear all over the world. Although Im not an American I would like that Obama wins the 08 elections, but even then I doubt that the US foreign policy will change.

Thank you for reading these posts I hope i didnt insulte anyone. I tried to be as objective as I could :)

You are so wrong, on almost every point. To wit:

- #1. Due to the promised Iraqi oil revenue, the U.S. Treasury is running a surplus.
- #2. The National Debt will be paid back from lottery revenue.
- #3. Oil now hovers around $120.00. Cha-ching!!
- #5. Do we really want to be known around the world as the place all the crap is made?
- #6. English will always be the dominant business language. Have you ever heard Mandarin Chinese? Who can make sense of it?
- #7. But, do we need GRAIN?? Just let the canned food industry fill in the blanks.
- #8. It's just that so many young people have decided to offer their lives in the defense of this nation in the war on terror that they no longer have the time to concentrate on scholastic endeavors.
- #9. You'll notice that many more older workers are working...at..say.....McDonalds these days!
- #10. The economy is fine, 'cause weapons manufacturers, oil producers, defense contractors, and the like are reaping enough profits to support all the economic failures that plague a modern economy.
- #11. Unions were killed off in the last century. And so what if China is getting all the manufacturing jobs now. Just wait until they really surpass us. Then watch all those jobs go to places like....Chad....Somalia, etc.
- #12. That doesn't matter, don't you see? Those reserves were sold off to finance the war on terror, so the Iraqi oil profits will.....uh, sorry.
- #13. I simply don't get this one. I have a credit card debt of $224.84. How could anyone get themselves into $48,000 worth of debt? Wouldn't you rather rent than buy? When things go wrong, it's always somebody else's problem.
- #14. Counterfeiting makes the dollar more attractive, not less!
- #15. The economy recovered very nicely, thank you very much! Dick Cheney told me so!
- #16. EEWW, you're just so sure of yourself there, aren't you? Decadence is underrated.
- #17. Global warming would happen even if we had not figured out how to build automobiles.
- #18. It's a dog-eat-dog world.
- #19. Think locally! Screw globally!
- #20. They'll be back! They can't ignore a super-power!
- #21. This is total left-wing mumbo-jumbo. You see, when farmers declare bankruptcy, it's merely an opportunity for corporate agriculture to move in and correct a wrong. They will make money. It's a win-win situation for everybody, except those original farmers, and their families, and their suppliers, and their local markets, and their barbers, and their hired help, and the local bakery, and their neighborhood pharmacy, and their near-by car dealer, and their town computer salesman, and their nearest lottery distributor, and their.....

Please see the humor in this. People are tearing this planet apart. Who 'wins' then?
