Israel's notorious spy agency, Mossad, is helping Egypt to interrogate detainees recently held in that country, a Lebanese daily reveals.

Egypt's General Prosecutor's office claimed that several detainees allegedly comprising of some Hezbollah members planned a series of 'sabotage operations' inside Egypt before they were arrested, the Arabic newspaper al-Akhbar reported on Thursday.

The daily quoted informed sources in al-Quds (Jerusalem) as saying that two retired Mossad officers had gone to Cairo to interrogate the detainees.

Egypt and Israel are also planning to conduct joint operations near the Egypt-Palestine border next week to identify what they call Hezbollah members.

Egypt arrested 49 people last Tuesday, accusing the Hezbollah of recruiting the group to stage attacks against Egypt's tourist areas.

This is while, Hezbollah's Secretary General, Seyyed Hassan Nasrallah, rejected the allegations in a televised speech last Friday.

"I fully reject and deny all charges that Hezbollah was intending to launch an act of aggression in Egypt or at any other part of the world," Nasrallah said.
