The person who may be responsible for more food-related illness and death than anyone in his

Here's the back story.

When FDA scientists were asked to weigh in on what was to become the most radical and pot

But the biotech industry had rigged the game so that neither science nor scientists would stand FDA policy and he wasn't going to be swayed by feeble arguments related to food safety. No, to get past these types of pesky concerns. He was going to lie.

Dangerous Food Safety Lies

When the FDA was constructing their GMO policy in 1991-2, their scientists were clear that ge "different risks" than conventional foods. But official policy declared the opposite, claiming that GMOs substantially equivalent.

This fiction became the rationale for allowing GM foods on the market without any required sa foods were safe to eat was placed entirely in the hands of the companies that made them -- c and Agent Orange were safe.

GMOs were rushed onto our plates in 1996. Over the next nine years, multiple chronic illnesses: emergency room visits doubled between 1997 and 2002 while food allergies, especially among asthma, autism, obesity, diabetes, digestive disorders, and certain cancers.

In January of this year, Dr. P. M. Bhargava, one of the world's top biologists, told me that after foods in the US are largely responsible for the increase in many serious diseases.

In May, the American Academy of Environmental Medicine concluded that animal studies have infertility, accelerated aging, dysfunctional insulin regulation, changes in major organs and the g allergies, and inflammation

In July, a report by eight international experts determined that the flimsy and superficial evaluat "systematically overlook the side effects" and significantly underestimate "the initial signs of dis nervous and reproductive systems, among others."

The Fox Guarding the Chickens

If GMOs are indeed responsible for massive sickness and death, then the individual who overs uniquely infamous role in human history. That person is Michael Taylor. He had been Monsanto after, he became Monsanto's vice president and chief lobbyist.

This month Michael Taylor became the senior advisor to the commissioner of the FDA. done?

The Milk Man Cometh

While Taylor was at the FDA in the early 90's, he also oversaw the policy regarding Monsanto' -- injected into cows to increase milk supply.

The milk from injected cows has more pus, more antibiotics, more bovine growth hormone, and IGF-1 is a huge risk factor for common cancers and its high levels in this drugged milk is why s against rbGH. A former Monsanto scientist told me that when three of his Monsanto colleagues levels, even they refused to drink any more milk -- unless it was organic and therefore untreate

Government scientists from Canada evaluated the FDA's approval of rbGH and concluded that as well as Europe, Japan, Australia and New Zealand. But it was approved in the US while Mic caused a significant rise in US cancer rates. Additional published evidence also implicates rbGI

Taylor also determined that milk from injected cows did not require any special labeling. And a paper suggesting that if companies ever had the audacity to label their products as not using rB according to the FDA, there is no difference between milk from treated and untreated cows.

Taylor's disclaimer was also a lie. Monsanto's own studies and FDA scientists officially acknowledged used Taylor's white paper as the basis to successfully sue dairies that labeled their products a

Will Monsanto's Wolff Also Guard the Chickens?

As consumers learned that rBGH was dangerous, they refused to buy the milk. To keep their c to not use the drug and to label their products as such. Monsanto tried unsuccessfully to convir rBGH-free claims, so they went to their special friend in Pennsylvania -- Dennis Wolff. As state labeling products rBGH-free was illegal, and that all such labels must be removed from shelves national brands, as they couldn't afford to create separate packaging for just one state.

Fortunately, consumer demand forced Pennsylvania's Governor Ed Rendell to step in and stop compromised position that now requires rBGH-free claims to also be accompanied by Taylor's

President Obama is considering Dennis Wolff for the top food safety post at the USDA. Yikes!

Rumor has it that the reason why Pennsylvania's governor is supporting Wolff's appointment is with the rBGH decision. Oh great, governor. Thanks.

Ohio Governor Gets Taylor-itus

Ohio not only followed Pennsylvania's lead by requiring Taylor's FDA disclaimer on packaging, place that disclaimer on the same panel where rBGH-free claims are made, and even dictated their labels and may ultimately dissuade them from making rBGH-free claims at all. The Organi Association filed a lawsuit against Ohio. Although they lost the first court battle, upon appeal, tl Thousands of Ohio citizens have flooded Governor Strickland's office with urgent requests to w

What's amazing is companies like Monsanto can only succeed with the support of government.

If we didn't have an FDA, people would be a lot more cautious about what they eat. We'd have that would test foods and drugs. Chances are the genetically modified foods wouldn't be sold c

And if those private food testing companies lied or made a mistake, they'd go out of business.

Today, the FDA can lie about information or make terrible mistakes that injure or kill people, ar FDA makes a mistake, they get MORE taxpayer money because they'll claim they didn't have mistakes...The FDA has zero risk of making any mistakes, yet people still listen and respect th

Excuse me, but your FDA is not "making mistakes." It's quite simply a corrupt mess that be protecting the public. Privatising its operations is pointless, as food safety testing is of competition you would like to see. Even if competition were to arise, they'd be competing outsourcing their way to even lesser oversight. As in the Iraq war, your government would private companies to do what it used to do more cheaply on its own. In most developed agencies are fairly trustworthy. Yours could be too. Food and drug testing should have the scientific community. Public or Private, anything less is a sham.
