Protesters in Madrid and Barcelona Sunday voted to continue occupying the central squares of their cities. Tens of thousands of demonstrators, calling themselves the Indignant and their movement the Spanish Revolution, packed squares across Spain in a wave of outrage over high unemployment and government austerity measures. They accuse politicians of solely looking after the interests of the wealthy and of refinancing Spain on the backs of young and working people. The demonstrators called for a boycott of local elections on May 22, dealing a crushing blow to the ruling Socialist Party. Tent cities have spread elsewhere in Europe to Athens and Paris. A pan-European "major day of protest" is set for June 19th. Source
