While Congress wrangles over repealing the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act of 2010, lawmakers in nine states have taken steps to bypass Washington D.C. completely and take matters into their own hands.

The latest? North Dakota. Introduced by State Senators Sitte, Berry, and Dever is Senate Bill 2309 (SB2309 (<http://www.legis.nd.gov/assembly/62-2011/bill-actions/ba2309.html>)), the National Health Care Nullification Act. (h/t Chris Stevens)

It states, in part:

The legislative assembly declares that the federal laws known as the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act [Pub . L. 111 - 148] and the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act of 2010 [Pub . L. 111 - 152] are not authorized by the United States Constitution and violate its true meaning and intent as given by the founders and ratifiers and are declared to be invalid in this state, may not be recognized by this state, are specifically rejected by this state, and are considered to be null in this state.

The bill also establishes penalties, including fines and jail time, for any agent seeking to enforce the federal health care bill within the state's borders:

Any official, agent, or employee of the United States government or any employee of a corporation providing services to the United States government who enforces or attempts to enforce an act, order, law, statute, rule, or regulation of the government of the United States in violation of this Act is guilty of a class C felony.

State legislators in Maine, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas and Wyoming have already introduced similar bills. Another is expected for introduction in Idaho any day now as well.

2007, 2 years after the Bush administration and the republican congress gave us the constitutional Real ID act, states like Maine and New Hampshire began the process of passing solutions and laws rejecting the federal law. Now, nearly 25 states have gotten on board with the nullification efforts led by democrats and the ACLU – and the result? The law is virtually null and void ... most of the country.

Today, less than a year after the Affordable care act – already 7 states have passed Health Care Freedom Acts, rejecting the mandates in the federal law. Those states are focusing primarily on a strategy of trying to win in federal court to affirm their state laws.

But introduction of the nullification act in nine states already (sources close to the Tenth Amendment Center tell us to expect a number of other states do the same this year) – indicate that there's a growing segment of the population that is looking to exercise their rights in their states whether Congress or the federal courts want to give them permission to or not.

Will these bills go anywhere? Only time will tell. But, whether they do or not, there is much to be learned from the left-wing nullification efforts of the last few years and beyond. Whether it's 25 states saying no to Real ID, or 15 states rejecting federal laws on marijuana – there's a blueprint. When enough people say no to federal laws, and enough states back them up by passing laws to do the same – there's not much that Washington D.C. can do about it.

To Edmund Slonecker to what theory are you point? The Tenth Amendment is not a there it is very real and easy to read and understand. The real issue is the one that most if not everyone misses and it is this, The United States Government is not a PARTY to the Constitution of the United States and the United States District court does not have Original Jurisdiction over a constitutional question. It is the state court and only the state court that has Original Jurisdiction, with the Supreme court having appeallate jurisdiction. The United States Governemt is a creature of the Contract call the Constitution and in now way shape ore form Owns jurisdiction over it. That Is no theory just basic contract law.

This is getting interesting, we're finally seeing the states drawing the line against the creeping federal encroachment on our lives.
The real fun is watching the Zionist groups like the SPLC, the ADL and others - who masquerade as "civil rights" organizations - having nervous breakdowns at the prospect of the 10th amendment & the Oathkeepers.
Forget the Tparty, they've already been hijacked by radical Jews & their puppets (Sarah Palin).
The Oathkeepers and the 10th amendment are the great firewalls that will keep these bastards in check!

i'll be more impressed when a number of states declare they have sovereign control over their own National Guard, and order their National Guard to oppose any federal effort -- including by the US Military -- to violate these nullifications.

So you don't want the federal government controlling your lives, you rather have your lives controlled by the big corporations which will ration healthcare according to their economic interests and will decide who lives and who dies according to profitability criteria.

If you read Obamacare, it forces all people to buy insurance from the corporations, and the government which is controlled by lobbyists will dictate what health you receive.

We don't want Obamacare because it will give the corporations more power.

@marcos I like state's rights and I also like the idea of a state run universal health care system maybe I would move to a liberal state like Mass. and those who don't like the idea of state health care can move to the Dakotas. The beauty of keeping power at the state level is that Americans can exercise choice by choosing in which state they wish to live. Can you say that about a Federal program?

I'm forced to buy car insurance so as to not be a financial burden on someone I may run into. So why shouldn't people be forced to have health insurance so they don't become a financial burden to society when they get sick? Also, if federal care is sooooo bad, then we should abolish Medicare and Medicaid.
